Common Issues in Condominium Governance:

This brochure, part of a two part series is intended to provide general information on certain circumstances that occur in the day-to-day operations of a condominium, especially those that may be subject to specific laws.

This is not a substitute for obtaining legal advice or other competent professional assistance to address specific circumstances.

Smoking

State law prohibits smoking in enclosed and partially enclosed places open to the public including elevators, lobbies, hallways, and other common areas in condominiums.

The prohibition also applies to electronic smoking devices.

There are no State or county laws that prohibit smoking within individual residential condominium units.

Modifications & Additions

An owner is prohibited from doing any work in or outside their unit, which would jeopardize the soundness and safety of the “property.”

If an owner proposes to make a material addition or alteration that would not jeopardize the property, they usually must obtain the written consent of:

- 67% of the unit owners
- All unit owners whose units or appurtenant limited common elements would be directly affected by the addition or alteration, and
- The Board, which consent cannot be unreasonably withheld.

Nonmaterial additions and alterations are those that do not: jeopardize the soundness or safety of the property; reduce its value; impair any easement; detract from the appearance of the project; interfere with or deprive any nonconsenting owner of the use or enjoyment of any part of the property; or directly affect any nonconsenting owner. These usually require:

- Approval by the Board, which approval cannot be unreasonably withheld; and
- Such percentage, number, or group of unit owners as required by the declaration or bylaws.

Aging in Place

Refers to the concept whereby an elderly person may continue to live at home rather than having to move to an outside facility.

- A condominium’s Board may request a functional assessment of an elderly or disabled unit owner or resident who is aging, aging in place, or living independently with a physical or mental disability or disabling condition.
- The Board, however, is not required to request such an assessment or implement the recommendations of an assessment.
